2nd Annual UCLA Solid Organ Transplant Symposium:
Addressing the Organ Shortage, Expanding Access and Bridging Gaps

Course Description
The UCLA Solid Organ Transplant Symposium is a one-day conference coordinated through UCLA Health Department of Transplant Services; the UCLA Office of Continuing Medical Education and the UCLA Transplant Multi-Disciplinary teams. The goal of this program is to provide a forum for UCLA Transplant multidisciplinary team experts to discuss the organ shortage crisis and explore recent changes to organ allocation and expansion of donor criteria that may help attenuate the gap between the supply of and demand for organ donors, while striving for ethical management of a scarce resource.

Target Audience
The target audience for this symposium is health care professionals who provide care for patients pre- and post-transplant including: Heart, Lung, Liver, Kidney, Pancreas and Intestinal/Multivisceral transplantation. The symposium content is designed for local community physicians, transplant nurses, transplant nurse coordinators, administrators, nurse practitioners, pharmacists, social workers, dietitians and all members of the transplant team to guide and improve their clinical practice and patient management during all phases of transplantation.

Learning Objectives
Following completion of the course, attendees should be able to:
• Educate patients regarding new donor options that may help decrease the wait for a kidney transplant.
• Explain the challenges and potential contraindications for living liver or kidney donation.
• Identify the importance of pre-transplant nutrition interventions for post-transplant success.
• Identify measures to assist potential pre-transplant patients in overcoming psychosocial barriers to achieve successful transplant outcomes
• Discuss the use of HCV positive organs and explore innovative medical and surgical therapies for HCC pre transplant as a means to increase utilization of scarce resources and to provide positive recipient outcomes
• Debate the opportunities and challenges of the current state of organ allocation
